1. None of the documents cited in the international search report anticipates the present claims 1 to 31. Specifically, the presence of a physically separate nutrient supply in the binding medium is not described in documents D1 to D4.

It follows that the subject matter of claims 1 to 31 is novel (PCT Article 33(2)).

2. D3 is considered to be the prior art closest to the subject matter of claim 1 (cf. D3, pages 4 to 6, examples I to IV).

D3 differs from claim 1 in that it does not describe the presence of a physically separate nutrient supply in one or more separate areas of the carrier medium.

According to the present application, the problem that the present invention is intended to solve is considered to be that of promoting access to the nutrients by the micro-organisms located furthest from the outside of the micro-organism binding medium (cf. page 2, line 19 to page 3, line 2 of the present application).

However, claim 1 in its present form does not appear to solve this technical problem over the entire scope thereof.

Indeed, for said technical problem to be solved, the nutrient supply must be located not at the outer boundary of the micro-organism binding medium but as far away as possible therefrom (cf. claims 2 and 3 and claim 22). However, no equivalent technical feature is present in claim 1. As a result, claim 1 does not solve the above-mentioned technical problem over the entire scope thereof.

No other specific technical problem linked to the fact that "the nutrient supply is physically separate in one or more separate areas" of the micro-organism carrier medium appears to have been solved by claim 1. Therefore, this technical feature is considered to be an arbitrary selection. Under no circumstances can the insertion of an arbitrary technical feature be considered to involve an inventive step. It follows that claim 1 does not involve an inventive step as defined in PCT Article 33(3).

The same argument applies mutatis mutandis to the subject matter of independent claims 21, 30 and 31, which thus do not involve an inventive step either.

Dependent claims 4 to 20 do not contain any features which, when combined with the features of any one of the claims to which they refer, might define subject matter that complies with the requirements of inventive step of the PCT (see documents D1 to D4 and the corresponding passages cited in the search report).

3. The subject matter of claims 2, 3 and 22 to 29 is not found in or obvious from the prior art.
